Key Highlights	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Outdoor Gardens  Open to the public, Central Public Library’s gardens include the Bamboo Garden, which houses 5,000 bricks from the former National Library at Stamford Road.  Also located within the garden are life-size bronze figures by Chong Fah Cheong featuring four children in various reading poses, poised on white marble rocks. The sculpture’s fantastical nature illustrates the idea that “Anything can happen when you read”. This concept is further reinforced by the garden setting which promotes the experience of being lost in a world of books.</li> <li>• My Tree House  The world’s first green library for kids, “My Tree House”, was officially opened by Minister for Communications and Information Yaacob Ibrahim on 31 May 2013. The project was developed together with City Developments Limited and is steered by green principles in all facets from design, infrastructure and use of sustainable materials, to collection, services and programming.  Features include The Weather Cloud, which displays real-time weather data from the Marina Barrage. A series of green-themed programmes for children are also hosted at My Tree House.</li> <li>• Literary Arts  Being a Literary Arts Library, Central Public Library hosts a series of programmes such as Meet the Author sessions with famous and popular authors.  The library is also home to two book clubs: the Book Lovers’ Club which focuses on relationships and inspirational stories, and the Singapore Novelist Book Club.</li> </ul>
